

Since the new 'telemarketing' law has been implemented in Indiana my calls have been greatly reduced from telemarketers, which is quite nice. I really don't feel companies have the right to bother me, unsolicited, just because I don't want to pay extra for an unlisted phone number. These calls are very annoying and I have yet to EVER buy anything from one of these calls. I realize I can just hang up but they usually call during meals or on weekends when we are busy. I feel that the FCC shouldn't pursue and national law that would override the state laws in place as this would decrease our laws effectiveness.
